Appeal from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Rakoff, J.).

UPON DUE CONSIDERATION, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED that the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.

This case concerns objections to a roughly three-billion-dollar settlement agreement in a securities class action against Petróleo Brasileiro S.A. (“Petrobras”). Two purchasers of Petrobras shares, Richard and Emelina Gielata, objected to the proposed settlement, arguing that the settlement class should have excluded claims based on foreign purchases of securities (which were likely meritless under U.S. securities law). The district court approved the proposed settlement and determined that the Gielatas’s objections were without merit, reasoning that the defendants are permitted to settle meritless claims. See In re Petrobras Sec. Litig., 317 F. Supp. 3d 858, 866–67 (S.D.N.Y. 2018). On appeal, the Gielatas assigned a portion of their claim to their son, Joseph Gielata, a retired attorney who had drafted his parents’ original objection in the district court.<sup>1</sup> All three Gielatas, proceeding pro se under a single brief written by Joseph Gielata, now argue that there is a conflict between shareholder claims and claims based on purchases of debt securities (“noteholder claims”) because the noteholder claims included the foreign-purchaser group, which were “weaker,” and the district court should have created subclasses with independent representation for each group. We assume the parties’ familiarity with the underlying facts, the procedural history of the case, and the issues on appeal.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The appellees noted in their brief that they intended to move for sanctions against Joseph Gielata for unauthorized practice of law. They have not so moved.

<sup>2</sup> The consolidated appeals by objectors Catherine O. and Mathis B. Bishop, No. 18-2120, and Spencer Bueno, No. 18-2276, as well as the cross-appeal by class counsel Pomerantz LLP, No. 18-2324, have all been dismissed.

The parties dispute the appropriate standard of review in this case. The appellees urge the application of an abuse of discretion standard, see In re Literary Works in Elec. Databases Copyright Litig., 654 F.3d 242, 249 (2d Cir. 2011) (“Literary Works”), whereas the Gielatas insist that a de novo standard is more appropriate because the adequacy of class representation is a due process issue and less deference is given to the district court’s decision when a class is certified simultaneously with the approval of a class settlement. However, even in cases where this Court addressed the adequacy of class representation, we have still applied an abuse of discretion standard. See id. Accordingly, we apply an abuse of discretion standard here.

The appellees insist that the Gielatas’ subclass arguments are waived on appeal because the Gielatas failed to raise them in the district court. The Gielatas reply that they asserted a conflict between subgroups in the settlement class, albeit not this exact conflict, and that another objector raised the subclasses issue, which the district court then fully addressed. “Generally, ‘a federal appellate court does not consider an issue not passed upon below.’” Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers Union v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 54 F.3d 69, 73 (2d Cir. 1995) (quoting Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 120 (1976)). “This general rule may be overcome only when necessary to avoid manifest injustice, or where there is some extraordinary need . . . to consider [the] appellant[’s] claim[.]” Id. (ellipsis in original) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

We agree with the appellees. The Gielatas did not assert their appellate arguments in the district court. Although their objection referenced the relevant caselaw related to subclasses in class action settlements, they asserted a conflict between shareholders and noteholders who could meet the domesticity requirement, on the one hand, and noteholders who could not meet the domesticity requirement, on the other; they did not make arguments about conflict between shareholders and all noteholders, as they do on appeal. The thrust of their arguments was to exclude foreign claims from the settlement class and appoint independent counsel to assist the settlement administrator to sort and remove the foreign claims. They did not argue for the creation of subclasses based on shareholders and noteholders or for appointment of class representatives for those subclasses, nor did they adopt the objections filed by others. Barring manifest injustice or an extraordinary need, then, we will not consider those arguments because the Gielatas waived (or at least forfeited) the arguments they now raise on appeal. Cf. Literary Works, 654 F.3d at 255 n.8 (declining to consider objector's other argument concerning a fundamental conflict between subclasses because it was not raised before the district court).

The Gielatas make two primary arguments challenging this analysis. First, they assert that there is no surprise to the appellees because the district court addressed the subclass issue in its order approving the settlement and the appellees had an opportunity to respond in the district court. But this is meritless. Although the district court addressed the subclass issue, it did so because of objections raised by two other parties. One of those objectors did not appeal, and the other withdrew his appeal. The appellees therefore would be surprised that the Gielatas are raising the subclasses issue when they did not do so in the district court, and their argument that the issue has been waived suggests that they are in fact surprised.

Nor can the Gielatas argue that the appellees had an opportunity to respond to the new objection; the new objection is not identical to or an extension of the subclass issue asserted by the other objectors. The two other objectors argued for subclasses consisting of domestic purchasers and foreign purchasers and for class representatives of the two subclasses. The district court addressed only these potential subgroups. By contrast, the Gielatas argue for subclasses for shareholders and noteholders, and independent class representatives and counsel for those two groups. The appellees have had no opportunity to litigate either issue.

Second, the Gielatas argue that the waiver rule is not applied rigidly and is especially relaxed in class actions, primarily relying on Yee v. City of Escondido, Cal., 503 U.S. 519 (1992), in which the Supreme Court stated that “[o]nce a federal claim is properly presented, a party can make any argument in support of that claim; parties are not limited to the precise arguments they made below.” Id. at 534. But Yee does not permit a party to raise an entirely new claim on appeal. Rather, it permits appellate courts to “entertain additional support that a party provides for a proposition presented below.” Eastman Kodak Co. v. STWB, Inc., 452 F.3d 215, 221 (2d Cir. 2006) (citing Yee, 503 U.S. at 534); see also In re Air Cargo Shipping Servs. Antitrust Litig., 697 F.3d 154, 161 n.3 (2d Cir. 2012). As discussed above, the Gielatas are not merely citing additional support for the objections they argued in the district court. They raise an entirely different claim: that there is a conflict between the shareholders and noteholders subgroups, rather than the domestic and foreign purchasers. This is not an objection they (or any other objector) made in the district court. See United States v. Braunig, 553 F.2d 777, 780 (2d Cir. 1977) (“The law in this Circuit is clear that where a party has shifted his position on appeal and advances arguments available but not pressed below, and where that party has had ample opportunity to make the point in the trial court in a timely manner, waiver will bar raising the issue on appeal.” (internal citations omitted)).

Further, the Gielatas cite no binding caselaw to support their contention that the waiver rule is relaxed in class actions, and we have previously applied the waiver rule against objectors who raise new arguments on appeal concerning potential internal class conflicts. See Literary Works, 654 F. 3d at 255 n.8 (argument concerning conflict between class member claims waived). We have also applied the waiver rule against objectors in other contexts. See Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 124 n.29 (2d Cir. 2005) (argument challenging class counsel's fee waived); In re Elec. Books Antitrust Litig., 639 F. App'x 724, 727 (2d Cir. 2016) (summary order) (argument challenging settlement as premature waived).

The Gielatas have waived their arguments on appeal by failing to raise them in the district court despite ample opportunity. They elected not to argue in the district court for any subclasses, and they identified the chief conflict as being between domestic purchasers, which included both shareholders and noteholders, and foreign purchasers. The Gielatas have thereby waived their challenge to the district court's class certification and approval of the settlement, and we see no manifest injustice or extraordinary need to exercise our discretion to nonetheless entertain the challenge.

We have reviewed the remainder of the Gielatas's arguments and find them to be without merit. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.
